Benefits of Teamwork

Problems solving: A single brain cannot bounce different ideas of each other. Each team members have a responsibility to contribute equally and offer their unique perspective on a problem to arrive at the best possible solution. Teamwork can lead to better decision, products, or services. The quality of team work may be measured by analyzing the following six components of collaboration among team members: Communication, coordination, balance of member contributions, mutual support, effort, and cohesion. In one study, teamwork quality as measured in this manner correlated with team performance in the areas of effectiveness (i.e., producing high quality work) and efficiency (i.e., meeting schedules and budgets). A 2008 meta-analysis also found a relationship between teamwork and team effectiveness.

Accomplish tasks faster: A single person taking on multiple tasks will not be able to perform at a same pace as a team can. When people work together, they can complete tasks faster by dividing the work to people of different abilities and knowledge.

Healthy competition: A healthy competition in groups can be used to motivate individuals and help the team excel

Developing Relationships: A team that continues to work together will eventually develop an increased level of bonding. This can help people avoid unnecessary conflicts since they have become well acquainted with each other through team work. Team members' rating of their satisfaction with a team is correlated with the level of teamwork processes present.

Everyone has unique qualities: Every team member can offer their unique knowledge and ability to help improve other team members. Through teamwork the sharing of these qualities will allow team members to be more productive in the future.
